Staffa is a small island off the coast of Mull, about $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles in circumference, chiefly of basaltic formation. Among its principal attractions to tourists is Fingal's Cave, one of the most unique sights in Scotland. The height of this cave is 60 feet, and the length about 200 feet, the roof being supported by basaltic columns, some of six and others of more sides. The colour scheme in this natural wonder is indescribably beautiful.
